Dr. Anne Bruce is a Professor and the Associate Director of Graduate Education in the University of Victoria, School of Nursing. Anne's approaches to research and teaching invite students into the in-between spaces of our professional and personal lives. Her current research includes understanding nurses' experiences with medical assistance in dying, integrating contemplative approaches into teaching and learning, and understanding how RNs and LPNs negotiate their practice in acute care settings. She teaches in the MN-Advanced Practice Nursing and PhD program where she witnesses how nursing education can inspire, transform, and generate life-long friendships.
